

Can electroacupuncture improve erectile dysfunction?

Researchers at NICM Health Research Institute, Western Sydney University, are looking for men aged 18 years and over to participate in a study to investigate if electroacupuncture could help improve erectile dysfunction.

If you have had nerve sparing robotic-assisted radical prostatectomy surgery in the last 24-months, and as a result experience erectile dysfunction you may be eligible to take part in this trial.

For more information please contact

Study Chief Investigator – PhD Candidate Emma Wong

p. 0421 021 124

e. e.wong2@westernsydney.edu.au

This trial has been approved by Western Sydney University Human Ethics Committee (Approval Number: H14239) and the Sydney Adventist HealthCare Limited Ethics Committee Human Research Ethics Committee (Approval Number: 2020-040).